A Wise Conclusion.

ACCIDENTLY SHOT.

Josephus Powell the Victim to a Stray Ball From the Pistol of Charlie Berryhill.

Late yesterday afternoon Josephus Powell a young man working for Brown the auctioneer, was accidentally shot in the arm by Charlie Berryhill, an attaché of the Peoples Vaudeville Theatre. It seems that Powell had stepped into Bibbs' restaurant, next door to the auction house, to get a lamp that had been loaned to Mr. Bibbs by Mr. Brown and that after getting it he started out and when at the door of the restaurant a pistol report rang out and with it Powell's right arm dropped to his side with the flesh torn and lacerated below the elbow. For some time it could not be learned who fired the shot as Berryhill in his fright ran and hid. After fully realizing what he had done, however, he came up and explained as follows: He says he was throwing out the cartridges preparatory to filling it with blanks to be used at the theater, in a fearful stage tragedy, which was billed for last night's play. He dropped the pistol, the fall exploding a cartridge with the above results. Mr. Powell was taken to the Palace Drug Store where Doctors Brown and Yarbrough dressed the wound. No bones are broken and Mr. Powell will be able for duty in a few days if no further complications set in. Berryhill is very much grieved over the accident but of course no blame attaches to him.

Plead His Own Case.

Yesterday afternoon Henry McKnight, a gentleman of color, was arraigned in Judge Stuart's court on a charge of maintaining a nuisance. He plead not guilty and while ably represented by Judge Hardy, he persisted in conducting his own defense. He was allowed the privilege and as a consequence the trial was greatly enjoyed by judge, bar, jury and spectators. Henry displayed considerable tact in the examination of witnesses and his argument to the jury was listened to with rapt attention. Notwithstanding his eloquent appeals the jury returned a verdict of guilty.

English Horsewomen.

Different observers have commented upon the increase of women riders in England who ride on the off side of their horses. The English woman has been taken as a model in horsemanship, and her departure in this respect will certainly have its influence. It is said that already the sight is sufficiently common in Hyde park to have caused to arouse comment, and though it still looks odd "and not thoroughbred, you know," its cause of being is sensible enough to procure sanction for it. According to those who know, riding on one side of her horse where a woman rides almost daily has a tendency to give an undesirable swing or curve to her figure, and the idea of an occasional change is on the same principle as "running the other way" around a circle.

A Tribute to Rosina Vokes.

Rosina Vokes' gowns and effects put up at auction make Felix Morris poetically mournful in the Boston Herald over the going out of that bright life.

"Poor little woman! Incomprehensible it is that such vivacity, such animation, such love of mirth, of song, of gladness and of life should ever be silenced. Why not flow on forever? Surely thy mission was to lighten life's burdens, to bring the bright smile to wearied, heartworn nature, innocently to teach the better lesson and make the world happier by thy mirth provoking ways."

"In the kindly memory of her many admirers she will live as long as they do."

The torpedo or electrical fish has two distinct galvanic batteries. When irritated, the fish has been known to deliver 100 shocks in two minutes. When taken from the water, its electrical power is nearly four times as great as when in its native element.
